

HENSLEE GIVES DORSEY

MATERIAL FOR DEFENSE

Frank Juror Attacked
Confers

With Solicitor—Latter
Due

Here Wednesday

According to dispatches from Valdosta, Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and his assistant, E. A. Stephens, will leave that place for Atlanta Tuesday night.

The solicitor refuses to state whether or not he will be ready on Saturday for the argument of Leo M. Frank's motion for a new trial.

The solicitor and his assistant have devoted their entire time to working on the voluminous motion, and will continue after their return to Atlanta. However, so many points are involved in the defense's motion and the work of answering them is so tedious that it would be surprising if the solicitor asks for still more time.

He was in conference Saturday with A. H. Henslee, the juror upon whom the defense has centered its strong attack, and through Henslee the solicitor is said to have secured a number of important affidavits, the contents of which he is guarding zealously.

C. D. Goebel Writes He Heard Henslee's Attack

From Ensley, Ala., comes a letter from G. D. Goebel to The Journal, in which he declares that he can corroborate the affidavit of Mr. Lehman, who swears that Juror A. H. Henslee made remarks to him on a train before the trial, showing that he (Henslee) was prejudiced against the man on whom he was to pass judgement.

The writer of the letter says that Mr. Lehman cut Henslee short by saying that he would rather not discuss the case.

"Then Henslee turned to me," Goebel says in the letter, "and said, 'I would like to get a chance to hang that man.'"

It is expected that before the Frank motion for a new trial is again called, additional cumulative evidence in the form of affidavits and depositions will be filed by the defense against Henslee. It is also continually reported that a third juror will be attacked before the actual argument of the motion commences, although the report cannot be verified.

Court attaches Tuesday declared that they were confident that the argument of the motion will not be further delayed, despite the immense amount of work Solicitor Dorsey has to put on it. The criminal court docket is in such a congested condition, they declare, that it is not believed that the Frank motion can much longer delay the change of judges which will allow routine sessions of the courts.
